Pearl Meadows was born in Ontario, Canada, and began her artistic career capturing urban lines, people and skylines on her 35mm camera. She spent the first part of her creative life in black and white and color darkrooms. Her passion for capturing imagery began with wanting to portray everyday moments. In retrospect, photo-realism and the photographic medium helped train her eye to see color, light and line. In 1992, Meadows began using oil as her medium for expression. Her paintings begin as sketches, watercolors and photographs. She works "Alla Prima" with bold colors, shapes and rich textures.

Joy has been watercolor painting, on and off, for the past eleven years. While she participates in many mediums, such as photography, letterpress printing, graphic design, and collage, she also spends quality time with her paints. Her painting has been significantly influenced by living in this inspiring southern Utah environment. Cadmium orange cliffs and Permanent Violet shadows are some of the signatures of her style.
